Re: QA Engineer Position

Greetings,

First, I'm sorry – not sorry for already providing you with value over the weekend. You probably arrived this week to a bunch of errors in your logs about file uploads. I received many errors while attempting to upload my resume... and now you've fixed it, so that should help future applicants!

Second, I am writing to seek a position with you as a QA (automation) Engineer. My submission is being sent using a reusable project I created using eclipse, maven, testng and selenium web driver – setup for a single run in chrome. It wasn't a piece of cake, but I enjoyed overcoming the challenges :) My ddf code (in java) is flexible enough to enable firefox and (ugh IE) as well… I would be happy to use it for regression testing as my second contribution to your company – it's already written after all.

Finally, you will find that I did not include all of my job history (LinkedIn has a longer list), or fill the fields to perfection. You can check out my resume directly or just give me a call to discuss. I'm a full stack, big picture, flexible engineer at heart – so I can code in Java/C#/JavaScript/SQL/NoSQL/etc if you need… However, I believe this QA Engineer position would be a great for me fit at this time.

Thanks and I look forward to your reply,
Clynton Caines
